After looking at all 3 designs, which layout structure would you find easiest to navigate and understand when looking for money advice (ignore the content style)?

For the design you picked, why do you think is the easiest to use? What specific features or sections did you like the most?

Because it's more of a journey which helps people find things based on where they are in life.

i liked its simplicity

I think design 3 is the easiest to use as the layout is easy to understand, its headers and content is clear, and the interactive things being the first thing you see when you scroll down could reel in users more than text.

Its less overstimulating than the rest.

none

straightforward, can find all the section I want in the homepage. using symbols instead of text make it easier to recall

For a website that is introducing high school students to money management, having so many options to choose from can look overwhelming (looking at design 1), and having tools that look like you would already need to know how to manage money to use them properly or as intended (looking at design 3). Design 2 seems to be the friendlist option.

I think that this design is the easiest to use because navigation doesn't have icons which could be confusing for some users, there are clear distinctions of what can be clicked and what is important. This design also features a lot of useful information like FAQ's and a translator which could be very useful to users.

Are there any specific features or elements from the other designs that you think should be added to the winning one? Any extra ideas to make the site better?

Use java script for the header and footer so you can sync them

i liked the navbar from design 1 better

I think you could add something like the "how the payslip looks like" from design 2 to design 3. I'm unsure if it would blend in well with the landing page but it could add some type of visual show of something in this website (before clicking a button to use tools). Another note is that I was unsure of what the icons meant on the navbar so maybe add words with it or just to words in general.

Definitely should add what design 2 had with its kinds of options (if design 2 does not win) to the winning design.

Move the payslip to a different more suitable page (I just got my first job). This makes more categorical sense compared to just being on the home page.
